

You were suspended what is the next step?

Satisfactory Academic Progress policy requires students to maintain a 2.0 or higher cumulative grade point average (GPA), and complete at least 66% of their registered credits. When you fall below either or both requirements, and you have already been on Warning, you are suspended. If you are on Probation and don't successfully complete the terms of your probation, you are suspended. Suspension letters are sent to State email in advance of the deadline.

Received after the deadline may be considered for a future term.

You should check your email for decision information.

What about financial aid?

Students who are suspended for the suspension period (one semester not including Summer) and are not academically qualified to return to school are suspended from financial aid. Students who are suspended from financial aid must successfully appeal before they are eligible to receive further financial aid. You must submit your appeal requesting both academic and financial aid consideration before the appeal deadline.

What if I was suspended before?

Appeals for academic suspension are more difficult. Make sure you are clear about the extenuating circumstances that caused you to be suspended while on probation. You should provide all documentation necessary when you submit your appeal. You must also submit your academic plan for success for appeal consideration. You should also address anything that led to your suspension.

What were your extenuating circumstances? What didn't go well, and why?

Address all unsuccessful terms. If this is not your first suspension appeal, make sure you address all instances of your suspension, and if you followed through what you outlined in your success plan from your
